TAPE Repair, Transfer, and Erase (TRUEcord) and more. These three chapters, which focus on the exciting new interface, my favorite new feature, and the new tools.() { return this.name; } } Tried by passing in an object of Employee as follows: public class Test { public static void main(String[] args) { Employee e = new Employee("John", "Smith"); e.printEmployeeInfo(); } } I get the following error: Exception in thread "main" java.lang.NullPointerException at Test.main(Test.java:9) Java Result: 1 So I created a list of employees and set it equal to e. List l = new ArrayList(); Employee e = new Employee("John", "Smith"); l.add(e); e.printEmployeeInfo(); The output is: Employee [name=John, surname=Smith] So this is good. What am I missing? A: A List is ordered, and you're adding an Employee to a List using put(E e) that has no ordering requirement. That means the order you add things to the list is completely arbitrary. The method printEmployeeInfo could be completely different depending on the order you add objects to the list. To avoid this problem, use add(Object e) or add(E e) instead. A: Sorry to say, but what you have been shown is a case of bad design. A List or a Set or any other collection should not have an implementation-dependent order. The List interface requires (among other things) that the elements are indexed. Yet you are adding the employee object directly to the list. The method you have used to add the elements will make no sense when the class is used in a collection implementation that does not support what you are trying to do. When you add the employee to the list, you need to call a method that takes a comparable employee object. The same method will be called when you want to order or remove an employee from the list. I would like to see a full ride scholarship university. I am not sure if a full ride school for rugby, or all schools in the U.S. qualify. In Canada most universities do not have a rugby team but do offer a full ride. As you know many schools are increasing the value of the rugby scholarships. If you want to be a coach or a director I would recommend a university that offers that as a major. If you want to be an administrator you will have to look at the schools that offer that major. That is a huge decision. My best advice is to start with a few schools, back up your passion and interest, take the best leadership courses that offer a specialization in your interest area, and you will be successful. Good luck. Yup, I think a senior full-ride scholarship is out of the question, at least at the level we are talking about. I think a school that gives out a few full-ride scholarships to players in their age group does so because the coach thinks a full-ride is important enough to justify the extra risk. I'm not saying that can't happen, but chances are there are other reasons to play for schools to consider the scholarships and might be minor. The biggest single factor would be the amount of non-revenue sporting scholarships available. Higher-level programs at Division I will usually give out a significant number of full-ride scholarships to their athletes. At lower levels this could be a relatively 3e33713323
