References Category:Association of Southeast Asian Peninsulan Category:Japanese literature Minimally invasive surgical (MIS) techniques were initially developed for use in the spinal column, for example, in the lateral interbody fusion, disc arthroplasty or kyphoplasty procedures that are performed to increase the intervertebral space. In these procedures, a small incision is made in the skin, the soft tissues (e.g. muscle, ligament, fascia) are retracted, and a cannula is introduced into the paraspinal tissues which allows the surgeon to apply a retraction element or other tissue manipulator, such as a device for compressing bone material into the disc space. The surgical channel is then used to introduce various surgical instruments and implants into the disc space to perform a procedure. The introducer channel may, for example, be used to introduce a surgical balloon or other implants, distractors, distention devices, forceps or the like. The surgical instrument
