WOW64 is the 32-bit operating system version for IE, and the 64-bit Windows operating system version for all other programs. Download both versions of Windows 7, Install WOW64 first, then extract to the folder you want to install it. If you get an error, then you have a 64-bit Windows, and there is no need to download and install 64-bit IE. Download Windows 7, Install both versions of IE. Uninstall 32-bit IE. Reboot the computer, log in using IE with Admin privileges, your Windows programs will be usable. If your Windows program cannot be opened by Win7, then you will need to re-install them using the Windows CD. There are a lot of anti-malware tools at the moment and some really effective ones, like Windows Defender, have a tendency to load on startup and get in the way. The irony of this is that they are by default anyway and nobody stops them from loading. What you can do is uncheck the startup and check it occasionally. I have a program I use called Deep Freeze. It has tons of pre-made profiles with various settings. It also has a backup system with periodic backups. It also works with your registry to get things like WGA that you don't want to mess with in case you decide you want to take a chance. I don't run it every day though, just once a month so I'm not getting any 09e8f5149f
