Q: JQuery ui Sortable Stop or start function my goal is to have a stop function while dragging but at the same time allowing the user to click where he wants to start dragging. I already have it working for a click on the same container but not for a drag event.

$("#sortable").sortable({ opacity: 0.6, start: function (event, ui) { $("#sortable").data('dragged', ui.item); }, stop: function (event, ui) { if (ui.item.data('dragged')) { ui.item.data('dragged').remove(); } } });
```

A: If I understand what you are trying to do, you are using start and stop to track the movement. You can check for the collision if the user has moved too far by checking the distance between the current position of the item and the initial position of the item. Note: If you change the order of start and stop, you will need to adjust the check. The distance between the initial and current positions will be different.

```
var drag
```
